Fertility building leys and green manures

This field lab will be run by Iain Tolhurst and Mark Measures at Tolhurst Organic, Whitchurch-on-Thames nr Reading, on 28th April 2015. We have good evidence and practical experience of the major benefits of diverse, multi-species mixtures for fertility building, forage production, pollinators and general resilience to unpredictable weather conditions. This field lab will share those experiences and set up trials to improve selection of species and assess performance of mixtures and Countryside Stewardship management prescriptions. More...

News

Goodbye and good luck We are sorry to say goodbye this week to Dr Henry Creissen, our crops researcher at Wakelyns who will be taking up a Post-Doctoral Researcher position at Teagasc in Ireland. Henry has been appointed to the EPIC project (Establishing a Platform for Integrated Pest Management in Irish Crops). We foresee many opportunities for collaboration within this project and hope to build a productive working relationship between ORC and Teagasc. We will miss his humour and enthusiasm and wish him well.
